What is database normalization?

Normalization of a database is the process of designing and optimizing the structure of a database to reduce the storage of duplicated information and ensure efficiency in working with data. It involves breaking down tables into smaller ones and reducing dependencies between them, thereby improving data integrity and reducing the risk of database anomalies.